EMMORATION TO THE WEST .- The emigration to Wisconsin, at the present time, is said to be rapid beyond all precedent. There are whole sections of country that are now thickly settled that a few months ago were entirely uninhabited. This applies to the northern as well as the southern counties. The emigration comes principally by the way of the lakes, from the northern and eastern States .- [N. Y. Jeffersoman.

We candidly believe there is no hope or anticipation now entertained by the settlers of this Territory with regard to what it is to be, too sanguine for ultimate realization. The most delightful section of country; possessing advantages for improvement over any and every other in the U. States; accessible at numerous points for the largest class of steamers; with that desirable concomitunt, a productive soil and salubrious climate—it is not surprising that the track to said through Wisconsin should be well beaten. And there is yet room .-Our Territory is large, and still holds out irresistible inducements to the emigrant of small means. It abounds in excellent water-powers, and navigable streams, and to the enterprising capitalist offers a rich and profitable held for his labor. It is no uncommon thing for us to hear of some burgh of three or five hundred inhabitants, which a year or two since was not. Large investments by eastern capitalists have accomplished much towards the building up of our new country, but we rely principally upon the unturing efforts of the hard-fieled tillers of the soil, for her tuture advancement and prosperity.

Hamilton, son of the celebrated Alexander Hamilton, the oldest miner in this region, informed me that at the bo'tom of these shafts, excavations were made horizontally in the earth from 50 to 100 feet, to enable him to progress with his digging. It is estimated that there are some 7,000 operatives engaged in digging and smelting lead, who, I observed were nad torsale at CUNNINGHAM'S Drugstore, some 7,000 operatives engaged in digging principally English and Irish. The whole viz of the lead region, though somewhat un. even, is strong soil, and capable of producing wheat, and all kinds of grain in abundance.
